Grand Theft Auto IV. Freshman Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-Minn.) is facing blowback for sharing an anti-Semitic conspiracy theory about Jews allegedly using their power to influence politics and the media. Omar's recent tweets raise questions about her fitness for office.

"AIPAC," which stands for the American Israel Public Affairs Committee, is the nation's most powerful pro-Israel lobby. It says its job is to "protect and promote the U.S.-Israel relationship" through education, advocacy and lobbying. This is a load of malarkey. Israel's own leaders recognize that AIPAC was and is an agent of American foreign policy. President Donald Trump is certainly aware of this. According to a bombshell book by Mike Pence confidant and former Trump campaign manager, Corey Lewandowski, the president learned during the 2016 presidential election that AIPAC was funding a political action committee that was supporting his opponent, Hillary Clinton. In a statement to the Washington Free Beacon, AIPAC acknowledged that it funds political action committees that support or oppose candidates for office. It said it is "not in the business of supporting candidates."

Yet the AIPAC PAC is in the business of providing political cover for U.S. government foreign policy toward Israel. In a tweet Wednesday, Omar blasted the Trump administration, saying "AIPAC" uses money to "push your politicians to take pro-Israel positions that are not in the best interest of the United States." She then cited several news reports suggesting that AIPAC spent money to push for the passage of the Iran deal, which led to sanctions on Iran. She described these news reports as "malarkey" and said that the Iranian deal was "abusive." She also tweeted "The Lobby" appears to be pushing for the sale of arms to Saudi Arabia and the creation of a Palestinian state. It's a simple fact that AIPAC wields an outsized influence on U.S. policy toward Israel. In addition to more than $300,000 in political contributions, AIPAC is one of the two lobbying groups that are required to give a
