engineering[Ganglionic structure of the splenic flexure in the cat]. It was possible to demonstrate ganglionic structure in the cat splenic flexure by using both histochemical techniques and methods of the catecholamine fluorescence with the aid of antibodies against catecholamines. In the splenic flexure of the cat ganglia of the sympathetic origin were located in the region of the mesenterial vessels and in the entire length of the ductus lymphaticus and in the blood vessels of the ventral zone of the splenic flexure; in the muscular plexus of the submucous layer of the small intestine and in the crypts of the splenic flexure. The innervation of the large intestine in the cat was proven to be purely parasympathetic. Holographic modulators are used in various displays to display a modulated laser beam, thereby generating images, text, and video. Conventional holographic displays generate images using a beam of light. One or more projectors each emit a spatially coherent light beam which is aimed at a holographic modulator. The modulator modulates the spatially coherent light in order to create an image. Conventional holographic modulators are formed using a glass substrate and a photoresist material. Such conventional holographic modulators can suffer from non-uniformity in transmission and reflection characteristics.

Stress in Women During and After Pregnancy: Beliefs, Emotions, Behaviors, and Coping. This article reviews the factors contributing to stress during and after pregnancy, including personality, health, work, social support, communication, and leisure, and the coping strategies women use in response to their pregnancy-related stress. A better understanding of these factors is needed to address the high prevalence of anxiety and depression among women of childbearing age. The aim of this review is to present current knowledge and perspectives on stress and pregnancy-related stress. A literature search of PubMed and PsycINFO was conducted. The authors identified relevant articles by searching for the terms "pregnancy stress," "pregnancy moods," "stress during pregnancy," and "pregnancy emotions." The quality of the studies was assessed using the STROBE checklist. A total of 56 articles met
