Feist Raymond Edward Feist (born August 9, 1956) is an American fantasy author, illustrator, screenwriter and comic book creator. His best-known works are the Law of Nines trilogy (1989–1991), which depicts a world where ten characters with no common characteristics form a cast of thieves, wizards, and assorted rogues. He has also published the novella "Prince of Nothing" in The Warrior Cats (1991), which was later made into an animated series. In the same year, he also co-created with Kevin Van Hensbergen and Kyle Higgins the comic series Elfquest. His first published book, The First Confessor, was released in 1994. Feist is best known for his creation of the fictional world of Midkemia, where he has written and illustrated a number of series, including the Midkemia Omnibus, the Midkemia Campaign Series, and the Legends of Midkemia series. The first two books of the latter were selected as Book of the Month Club's August 1999 Book of the Month and March 2000 Book of the Month. In 2002 he introduced two novels set in the works of Frank Herbert: The Warrior's Price and The Soul Prism. He is the author of the World of Erinn series, a retelling of the Norse myths, the hero, Sigurd, and his allies set in a fictional Nordic world.
