In the context of augmented reality for mobile devices, this article addresses a complex issue, this creates a large computational load on mobile devices. To solve this problem, you need to be able to use the processor of mobile devices, which differs from the processor of desktop computers in terms of performance. Thus, for this application running on a mobile device, it is necessary to use a single-core processor and, as necessary, allocate another processor. For example, to showcase an augmented reality app on an iPad. fffad4f19a
