filmsKUIs in theory can provide the same speed and bandwidth characteristics that fiber optics can, but they're very expensive and currently unproven. This is a future that would make fiber optics gasp in disbelief. If you can't tell the difference between a fiber optic communication line and a copper line then you could say you've got your cuisine of fiber. It all depends on how much data you need. If you're just going for an email and a newsfeed then copper is still going to work fine. It can transmit a gigabit of data a second for $10 or so. It's about three and a half to four times the price of fiber. But beyond the bandwidth performance, you also need the power supply to make sure that data is safe. We even discussed that in a previous episode of the channel. So we'll be putting together a video about why you should use fiber in the future based on all of
