(It is free, and takes about 1 minute.) Studies have shown that breast cancer patients with HER2/neu gene amplification (HGA) have a better treatment response, but the mechanism of resistance is unclear. HGA patients are classified as luminal A and luminal B types based on hormone receptors (HRs) and HER2 status. The interaction between HRs and HER2 is a key determinant of response. The HER2/neu receptor can recruit and activate several signaling pathways, including the EGFR family. Both epidermal growth factor receptor (EGFR) and HER2 are expressed in the cell membrane and are often found clustered at the edges of the tumor cells. We have discovered a subpopulation of mammary epithelial cells with a high density of HER2/neu receptors that interact with EGFR-HER2 signaling in a subset of tumors. In specific aim 1, we will determine whether the EGFR-HER2 interaction is required for resistance to anti-hormone treatment in the luminal B subtype. Experiments will focus on the CXCR4 ligand chemokine stromal cell-derived factor 1 (CXCL12/SDF-1) and its receptor CXCR4. In specific aim 2, we will determine the mechanism of activation of the EGFR-HER2/neu signaling pathway in the luminal B subtype and whether it contributes to the survival of cancer cells. We will explore the possibility that HER2/neu homodimer

The present plum tree, as compared with its parent plum tree "Crown A", is characterized as to novelty by producing fruit which ripen in the latter part of November, in skin which is brighter than "Crown A", and in which the flesh is a brighter red than the flesh of the parent "Crown A" plum. This variety of plum tree resulted from a controlled cross performed on March 6, 1985, at Davisville, Calif., between plum tree variety "Crown A" (unpatented) and plum tree variety "Royal Jubilee" (unpatented).
