With a few dozen implementations of of one system, I'm trying to decide how to structure the code and how to document it. I have an interface that each system implements, and I'm thinking to have one file per implementation that defines the same interface, and in all cases have a structure like so: interface IUnitOfWork { void Prepare(); void Delete(int value); void Commit(); } I'm not sure whether I should define the interface in the implementation file, or if that is overkill and there's a better way to structure it. I'm currently experimenting with 3e33713323
