What's New In?

Storyago is a simple, yet powerful photo organization and management application that makes it easy to view, edit and manage your picture collection. It's as easy as that! Dubya Signs Israel's Nuclear Weapons Supplier License, A green accrossing sign reads "Welcome to Iran" and "Welcome to Israel.": The license Israeli's gave to a notorious Iranian firm to develop uranium enrichment technology has been signed by the country's right-wing prime minister, Benjamin Netanyahu, according to a document obtained by The Washington Post. In a secret letter dated June 2, 2008, Netanyahu approves the deal with the French-Italian company, Eurodif, to sell Iran technology used to enrich uranium. He calls it a "historic" agreement. Unlike previous Israeli leaders, he does not set out the conditions under which Israel will permit enrichment by Tehran. The document was first reported by Shlomo Aronson, a journalist for the Israeli newspaper, Maariv. He said it was obtained during the Israeli military's bombing campaign last year in the Gaza Strip that destroyed the Osirak reactor, a nuclear facility in Iraq. Aronson said he had not spoken with Netanyahu about the deal. The Israeli leader's approach toward Iran has changed dramatically since 2005, when he opposed the sanctions imposed by President Bush and the United Nations Security Council. After the sanctions were passed in the U.N. Security Council, Israel quietly began cooperating with the French-Italian venture to help Iran build its nuclear weapons capability. Israel has an estimated 200 nuclear warheads and has never confirmed or denied possessing the bombs. In recent years, Israeli officials have expressed willingness to cooperate with the international nuclear watchdog agency, the International Atomic Energy Agency, if it were to allow inspectors into Iran. Israel has long sought to maintain its nuclear monopoly. It has repeatedly pointed to Iran's nuclear ambitions as a threat to the region. Israel is widely believed to have nuclear weapons. The agreement with Eurodif began on Oct. 12, 2006, and was executed to protect Israel's nuclear weapons program, which has been estimated to have a total of 200 warheads, according to the Congressional Research Service. Eurodif is an Israeli-French venture that signed a 25-year license with the United Nations, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the French and Italian governments. It is
