The development of AutoCAD started in 1982 at Wayne Wang, who designed the original visual language of AutoCAD, and the program's three main components, the drawing creation tools, the "drawing and measurement tools," and the "design time tools." In 1983, Wang hired Nat Knaak to be the project's second hire. Wang hired Chris Treggiari in 1987 and Ron Mirick in 1988. The first version of AutoCAD was released in December 1982, on floppy disks, but the first commercial versions were released as a Windows software package in September 1983. The development of AutoCAD was started by Brad Kowalski, who is the son of Wayne Wang, and became the technical leader of AutoCAD in 1987. Brad Kowalski also designed and produced the visual language of AutoCAD. Since then, the AutoCAD design process has been enhanced by new tools and functions. The "Document Map" feature allows users to edit and update the graphics in a drawing without any change to the underlying data. The "AutoDesk Rewind" feature enables users to go back to the last set of commands or drawings without having to start over. AutoCAD is available on most popular computers, including tablets, smartphones and some wearables. AutoCAD is designed to work in high-resolution vector graphics, so people use it to design in a variety of media, including paper and ink, as well as electronic and film media. What Is AutoCAD? AutoCAD is a commercial computer-aided design (CAD) and drafting software application. Developed and marketed by Autodesk, AutoCAD was first released in December 1982 as a desktop app running on microcomputers with internal graphics controllers. Before AutoCAD was introduced, most commercial CAD programs ran on mainframe computers or minicomputers, with each CAD operator (user) working at a separate graphics terminal. AutoCAD is also available as mobile and web apps. In this paper we consider the widespread and growing liability to compensate individuals for the effects of environmental health hazards in everyday life. The U.S. Supreme Court has held in part that a state may not require an individual homeowner to bear the cost of compensating a neighbor for the physical effects of noise or odors emanating from his home. However, the Court's opinion did not address whether such a neighbor is entitled to recover damages from the negligent manufacturer or distributor of products that generate the noise or odors. A body of federal law exists holding that producers of products that may affect the health of others are liable for the injury that occurs when the product is used as intended. These laws are inapplicable to noise and odors emanating from homes, but there is a large body of case law that has applied these laws to effects on public health. Additionally, some states have enacted statutes that allow victims of negligence to recover damages for physical harm caused by odors, noise, or the emission of air pollutants. We argue that these common law and statutory rules of liability should be extended to actions against manufacturers and distributors of products that produce or contribute to noise, odors, or other health hazards in homes.1.
