Once the data is loaded, you only have to press on the button that performs the fractal decomposition. The application proceeds to generate the fractal cycle analysis, performing calculations and plotting interactive evolution charts. The application plots the ZigZag for different transaction cycles and assesses the probability of price turning. By zooming in the charts, you can get a closer overview on the evolution of the analyzed indicators. ZigZag and technical indicators

Moving on to the Prediction tab, this application also generates various charts for the turning point probability at the latest peak, for multiple transaction cycles. The ZigZag indicator is also a good reference when it comes to changes in price trends. This indicator plots points whenever the price reverses by a percentage greater than a specific value. Its evolution can help investors detect price trends and reduce price fluctuations as much as possible. A table containing information about the technical indicators is also generated. Just like the ZigZag indicators, these indicators help predict future price movements. They are mostly used by traders and investors who rely on technical analysis to make their decisions.
